Front End Development

Specialized Certificate

The Field of Front End Development

Websites have evolved significantly over time from tools to publish information, to highly complex sites with various service functions and where more and more functionality can be found. Because of the complexity of most websites the development work has been divided between two types of functions which have generated two types of professionals: front-end and back-end web developers.

The Job of a Front End Developer

The front-end developer is the bridge connecting the designer and back-end developer. The developer's work is to take the final designs of an application from the designer, and code it into the front-end code so the back-end developer can understand it and build functionality around it.

Program Overview

The Front-End Web Development program teaches the student to code websites and applications. It will be of interest to web developers who are building applications that interact with the client-side and require input from the end user and to web designers who need to understand HTML, CSS and JavaScript to implement their graphical designs. Students will learn how to develop sites using HTML5, CSS3, JavaScript and jQuery. At the end of the program, students will create a portfolio website utilizing the techniques taught throughout the certificate program.

Learning Objectives

- Learn how to develop responsive sites and applications using HTML5, CSS3, JavaScript, and jQuery
- Understand the basic concepts of project management as they apply to webdevelopment
- Develop a portfolio of high quality to present to potential employers
- Gain understanding of best coding practices and how to code for performance using sprites, caching and modern tools of the trade

Program Benefits

- Hands-on comprehensive training designed to immerse you in the skills needed to successfully get started or advance your career
- Developed and taught by industry professionals
- Immediately applicable skills
